Quantifying the Monetary Value of Reuse

August 2017

This report has been prepared by the FreeTrade Ireland Team of Warren Phelan, Serena Byrne and Brian McIntyre with valuable contributions from the EPA and the Community Reuse Network of Ireland.

This study was funded by the EPA under the National Waste Prevention Programme.

Introduction

FreeTrade Ireland is an online reuse service providing a platform for householders, businesses, schools and communities to pick up and pass on quality items for free. Users of the website can advertise unused or unwanted items as well as searching for items they want. All items uploaded are available for free.

The savings realised by the service are currently calculated on two elements: (1) the avoidance of the purchase of an equivalent item, and (2) the avoidance of the disposal costs.

The current calculation of the avoided cost of purchasing an equivalent item is based on assigning a value of €100 to each item reused. A large proportion of the items reused through FreeTrade Ireland are bulky items, e.g. furniture, sports equipment, etc. and can be expensive to purchase new. In absence of reuse values an universal rate of €100 was applied and was considered a fair estimate which would balance out across the item categories.

With the increasing popularity of websites used to sell items second-hand, it is more appropriate to consider the valuation in terms of the options available for purchasing an equivalent item. It can no longer be assumed a user will purchase a new item should they not find what they want on FreeTrade Ireland.

The savings realised through reuse is dependent largely on the avoided cost of the purchase of an equivalent item. The objective of this proposed study is to determine a range of values for both new and used items in order to ascertain an appropriate item value should a user not find an equivalent for free on the service.

Obtaining a range of values for new and used items for the 252 items on FreeTrade Ireland will allow the savings achieved through the service to be accurately calculated.

Methodology

There are 20 categories of household items on FreeTrade Ireland. Each of these categories is further divided into 252 item sub-categories. The revised approach for calculating the value of the savings by reusing through FreeTrade Ireland is set out below.

The first step was to identify appropriate outlets to allocate an appropriate value to each sub-category item.

Given the range of categories of items on FreeTrade Ireland, there are multiple sources for purchasing new items. The challenge was to identify sources which reflect the reasonable market price for items. The outlets chosen had an online shopping function with the prices of their items readily available from their websites. Two competitively priced outlets were chosen for each category. For example, Argos and IKEA were sources for several items in the Furniture Category. For stationery, where the items are low-cost items and there is a limited demand for second-hand materials, only new prices were sourced. A competitive low price was identified from each source with an average generated. The pricing details are listed in Appendix A.

Prices for used items were similarly sourced from frequently used consumer second hand sites. DoneDeal.ie.ie and Adverts.ie.ie are two most prominent online classified ads websites in Ireland and were deemed to be an accurate source for item prices. A maximum and minimum value was sourced for each item generating an average price to buy used. The prices sourced from these sites are presented in Appendix B.

Pricing Issues

Challenges arose in determining the appropriate average value for specific items and tailored solutions have been implemented as follows:

1. The second hand price values for certain items was broad. Where a significant price gap between minimum and maximum values was identified, the difference was due to the item quality. As the purpose was to ascertain the appropriate cost someone might pay for an item a balanced approach was required.

Solution: Where this occurred, the median value price in the range was calculated from each source. The mean of these two values determined the final second-hand value of the item (refer to Appendix B for details).

2. For items in the Building Materials category, the quantities available on DoneDeal.ie and Adverts.ie varied considerably to the quantities sold by a supplier of building products, e.g. Goodwins, Woodies, etc. Many ads for Building Materials on DoneDeal.ie and Adverts.ie were for a mixture of items or non-standard quantities that were not similar to those from suppliers of new building materials.

Solution: Insofar as is possible, the values for a single item was calculated and used as the second-hand value.

3. In some instances, the selection of items in a sub-category on DoneDeal.ie and Adverts.ie was small. For certain items this resulted in higher second-hand values compared to the price of a similar new item. However in other cases the quality of the second-hand item was notably higher than the new item. This quality gap can result in a price difference between a higher value second hand item and lower priced new item,.

Solution: In some categories where a notable price difference occurred the levels of reuse are not high e.g. garden gates, farm tools, etc. and as such the overall savings will not be skewed. For other categories it is accepted that quality is causing the prices difference between higher quality second-hand items compared to new items of lesser quality. The affect of higher quality priced second- hand items has been moderated by taking the mid-range of the lower and upper prices and averaging the findings from each source (Appendix B).

4. For sub-categories a new price was not available due to the nature of the item. For example Vintage Bikes as they are not available new.

Solution: For such items only second-hand prices were sought.

5. In each category, there is a 'Miscellaneous' sub-category and this could include different types of items.

Solution: Conservative values have been assigned based on the types of items entered as Miscellaneous across the different categories, a selection of which has been listed below:

- o Agriculture & Machinery: wooden chicken coop

- Antiques: gramophone, fire surround, etc.
- Appliances: food processor, juicer, slow cooker, digital scales, etc.
- Baby Goods: bottle warmers, play mat, baby bath, etc.
- Books, Comics & Magazines: assorted books, encyclopaedias, etc.
- Building Materials: interior doors, roof tiles, plaster
- CDs, DVDs & Videos: cd racks
- Clothes, Fashion & Beauty: suitcases, t-shirts
- Electronics: electric lamp, fan, electric radiator
- Furniture: display cabinet, writing desk, headboard, clothes horse, etc.
- Garden & Outdoor Items: mostly plastic garden furniture
- Homeware & Crafts: waste bins, rugs, cutlery, kitchen appliances
- Motors, Parts & Accessories: roof box, fuel cans, etc.
- Musical Instruments: storage boxes
- Office Equipment: filing cabinet, lockers, whiteboard, paper trays, etc.
- Office Furniture: shelves, notice boards, chairs
- Pet Accessories: cat carrier, cat litter, feeding bowls
- Sports & Leisure: Golf bag, suitcases, airbed
- Toys & Games: Lego, children's' scooters, sandpit, playhouse, etc.

Results

The methodology and price analysis of this study which investigated both large and small subsets of household items is comprehensive. Other similar studies by WRAP, Zero Waste Scotland and the Furniture Reuse Network were reviewed but found to have been limited in approach and findings.

The methodology described delivered a range of second-hand values for each subcategory item sourced from DoneDeal.ie and Adverts.ie. From these range an appropriate value, i.e. the average cost to buy that item pre-used, was determined. Similarly, a range of competitive buy new prices for each category item was sourced, examined and an appropriate value assigned. The approach generated an accurate range of item values for 252 items replacing the previous flat rate applied to all items reused. The final second-hand and new values selected for each item are summarised in Appendix C.

In attempting to define an absolute item reuse value from the ranges, a consistent approach applied to all items was required. A fundamental question needed to be answered. Is a user more likely to source an equivalent item not available on the site from a second-hand outlet or purchase new? Without surveying users of the website and profiling their purchasing habits we cannot be certain of their consumer behaviour. The conclusion that the lowest price equivalent item will always be sought ignores a user's willingness to pay more for a quality item which may last longer. The price findings show quality pre-used items can be higher in price compared to a new purchase price for lesser quality.

In the absence of representative behavioural information it is assumed that users are as likely to try and source a pre-used item as they are to purchase an equivalent new item. Taking this approach, the price range between the second-hand and new values has been evenly split. The estimated unit reuse value is shown in Appendix C. We believe this strikes an appropriate balance between new and second hand market prices.

The unit reuse value applied to FreeTrade Ireland data for 2015 estimated savings from reuse of €660,234 (see Appendix D).
